Digital Collections is Indiana University's forthcoming digital image repository service, built by team members at Indiana University Libraries, IUPUI University Library, and University Information Technology Services, with additional feature development by Notch8. Based on Hyrax, this service offers collection managers the ability to upload, describe, and provide access to digitized materials including: image collections, books, musical scores, newspapers, and digitized archival materials. Digital Collections will launch as a pilot site in fall 2020, followed by migrating digital collections currently in various legacy digital library services with millions of digital objects from Indiana University campuses across the state.
